Emilio Gonzalez
USCIS Director

Dear Emilio Gonzalez:

Last Tuesday I was walking past the Federal offices in Sacramento, CA when I saw a long line of new citizens and their families waiting to undergo their naturalization ceremony. This sight filled me with pride! I was dismayed when I heard today that U.S. Citizenship and Immigration Services plans to raise the costs of applying for American citizenship to a level that may be beyond the reach of many recent immigrants.

During the past 12 years, the application costs have risen 400 percent. USCIS has proposed raising the cost of a green card from $325 to $905, a citizenship application from $330 to $595 and fingerprinting from $70 to $80.

USCIS is one of the few government agencies that operates primarily on user fees, yet it plans to put an additional burden on people already working as hard as possible to become lawful U.S. citizens. Naturalization for a family of four would rise to $2,430.

Congress should appropriate the funds necessary to allow thousands of hard-working immigrants to gain citizenship at a cost they can afford and USCIS should absolutely not enact these dramatic increases.

Sincerely,

Victoria Tedder
