Director et all,

When monetary funds are needed to ensure a smooth functioning government agency (or for most any other reason) public opinion is seldom a factor. The millions of people who pay into Medicare have no input regarding increased deductions from their Social Security, so why make a big deal about proposed Immigration fees. The money is needed. RAISE THE RATES.

As was proven in the demonstrations of less than a year ago, the true allegiance of the "criminal" immigrant is Mexico. They stand on street corners to seek work of "tax free" pay and most wouldn't become citizens if the fee was reduced. They don't want to intermingle and to stay in the company of each other and speak their own language. In short, they want to be Mexicans who enjoy a free ride at the expense of American taxpayers.

Most of our forefathers came to America legally, paid the necessary costs and gained legitimate tax-paying employment (and were proud to do so). They neither asked for, nor got a free ride and they didn't engage in mass demonstrations or act like beggars who are of the opinion that America owes them a living.

The bottom line is:

Money is needed. Increase the rates. If you don't like it, LEAVE. The price would still be cheap to be an American.

Sincerely,
Greg Munn
